

Brief Bio

Tieraona Low Dog, MD

Tieraona Low Dog, MD is a physician, educator, herbalist, researcher, wife, and mother, who has been weaving modern and natural medicine together for decades. Her resume is extensive and deep and includes leading two integrative medicine fellowships, chairing expert panels at the US Pharmacopeia, receiving a presidential appointment under Bill Clinton, publishing 50+ peer-reviewed articles, writing seven books (four with National Geographic), being honored as Time Magazine's Innovator of the Year, and is a recipient of four Lifetime Achievement Awards, and three Awards for Excellence in Science and Public Health. Dr. Low Dog has consulted with many fortune 500 companies and has been an invited speaker to more than 600 science/medical conferences.

In addition to her medical degree, her background includes an honorary doctorate in Naturopathic Medicine from Bastyr University, training in midwifery, massage therapy, and holding the 3rd degree black belt in Tae Kwon Do. Her unique history sets her apart from most conventionally trained physicians, making her sought out by patients, medical organizations, and industry.

---